Sean Guillory earned his PhD from UCLA in 2009 in Modern Russian History. He is the Digital Scholarship Curator in the Center for Russian, East European, and Eurasian Studies at the University of Pittsburgh.

Since 2005, he has provided critical commentary on Russia's past and present on Sean's Russia Blog.

In 2015, the site was transformed into the SRB Podcast, a weekly podcast on Eurasian politics, culture and history. The show has featured interviews with academics, journalists, policy makers, and pundits on Eurasia's past and present geared toward the general public interest.

The SRB Podcast's mission is simple: to provide a space for the many, many interesting thinkers who do amazing work to express their views, discuss their work, and contribute to the larger public discussion on the region. The show also seeks to give the public access to the wonderful and growing body of research that rarely reaches a broad audience but is crucially important, especially as tensions with and in the region flare. It is my hope the SRB Podcast will make a modest contribution to paint a picture of Eurasia in all its complexity and spread knowledge about it to an interested public.
